3 January 1918

President of the United States'
Thomas Woodrow-Wilson's New Year's address

In his address to Congress, the President of the United States presented 14 points upon which the peace after World War I should be based.

According to point 13, an independent state of Poland, with access to the sea, was to be formed, and that its establishment would be guaranteed by an international convention.
